Dear Mrs de Laszlo,

You will, I am sure, understand that I have no wish to add to your troubles at the present time; but on mature consideration I have come to the conclusion that it is advisable, in their interests and my own, that I should remove from my list the names of your two boys who, you may remember, were entered for my House at Eton some few years ago. You have perhaps already decided in your mind that their position here would be a difficult one, but not having heard from you I ventured to take the initiative myself about writing on the subject.

Believe me,

Yours very truly,

J. R. Robeson.
