

17th September, 1936.

My dear Friend,

I have hardly finished writing you when I have again to address myself to you, but it is a matter which is on my conscience.

As I do not now know anything about certain institutions in Hungary, and as I am constantly being approached as in the three letters which I am enclosing now, I am asking you if you will kindly let me know which of them is really a serious and worthy institution, when I will gladly do what I can for it.

I am sure you know of all these institutions, and as I have lately had so many unpleasant experiences in similar matters, I want to help only where it is really needed, and where matters are honestly dealt with.

I need not say more today, except that I am getting better daily, and look forward to hearing from you.

Yours ever,

Nagyságos
