MISS DOROTHY DICKSON

Whose return to musical comedy after an excursion into crook drama ("The Ringer") has been signalised by a big hit in "Tip-Toes," which has had a terrific success at the Winter Garden Theatre. Miss Dorothy Dickson's performance in the part of the lovely heroine with no money who marries the gallant hero with bundles of it, is justly rated one of the best she has ever given us. She has a wonderful opposite lead in Mr. Kearns, who comes to us from America and has carried London by storm

DEAREST,—This week, I suppose, finds three-quarters of the world in Scotland and the other quarter on the half-way stage at Doncaster. The rest of England is, of course, quite uninhabited! What will to-day bring forth I wonder? Another victory for the all-conquering Joe Childs and Lord Woolavinton and the smart black hoop on the white and the gold tasselled red cap by way of the seal, through the odds on Coronach? Well, we shall soon know now for certain; meanwhile of the meeting itself and those who were there, I shall have more to say in my next letter to you.

Of general news there are little bits here and there. The coal strike drags wearily on and has become a kind of creeping paralysis, but to make up for that some foreigner swims the English Channel about every other day. The Duke of Westminster has got a new yacht while his other is being built at Leghorn, while Lord Tredegar has given up yachting for good and laid up Restless. Talking of yachting, Lady Bradford and her girl, Lady Diana Bridgeman, have just started off to join the Beattys, who are cruising in the Mediterranean, and mean to go back again to Venice on their way home from Constantinople. Lady Dorothy D'Oyly Carte's girl, Bridget, is going to marry her cousin, Lord Cranbrook, and Mrs. Julie Thompson is reported to be engaged to a rich financier. Also the young Archduke Otto seems to be in the running again for the Hungarian throne. Poor little Empress Zita, she has tried hard enough. What a tragedy about the Prince of the Asturias. One knew that he was delicate, but not many of us had any idea that he was as seriously ill as that. And now as the second boy, Don Jaime, has been in the doctor's hands practically all his life, Don Juan, the next one, is probably to be made Spain's heir-apparent.

Records of doings in Scotland are few and far between, and but sketchy at that, and concerned mostly with games and gatherings, fêtes and bazaars. Mercifully, there are other things to do up in that glorious air and on those glorious moors, and one is doing them most of the time. The King seems to be enjoying himself and having good shooting at Balmoral, where Prince Henry has been with him and the Duke of York, who went on from
