"WAS IT WORTH IT?" 912

One débutante brought her autograph book and a fountain pen all ready for Kreisler to sign, which he good-naturedly did, but in taking back the pen she inked the entire front of her pretty green frock.

"Was it really worth all that," I asked her jokingly. "Oh yes, indeed!" she replied in an intensely serious voice.

Kreisler and the Princess managed to play Box and Cox twice during the evening. Once while the Princess was having supper Kreisler came back to the drawing-rooms and played the Londonderry Air until he was stopped, and then when the Princess came back he had to play it all over again.

The second time the Princess arrived back before Kreisler, who was discovered in an ante-room between Sir Harry Brittain and M. de Lazlo, the portrait painter, who were telling him funny stories!
