A Striking Portrait

Mr. Philip de Laszlo, whose arresting portrait of the Prince of Piedmont in the full splendour of Renaissance costume has attracted much attention, is going to add two more pictures to his considerable gallery of royalties, for he is leaving for Egypt, where King Fuad and Queen Nazli will sit to him.

He has just finished a portrait of Lady Bowden, who is tall and handsome. She tells me that she is delighted with the work. She was painted wearing a pair of very fine emerald earrings, and her big emerald brooch stood out boldly against the background of her black velvet dress.
